He's playing with a 52-card bridge. <sup>[2]</sup> <sup>[3]</sup> Gameplay Dealer gives each player a number of cards (usually five), held in hand or face down in front of the player. The dealer places the same number of cards face down in the center of the table. The game round consists of betting, followed by the trader turning one of the central cards, so that it is facing upwards. Every card in the hand of a player that has the same rank value as the central card ranking that has just been turned is now revealed and discarded. Discards can be placed face up in front of the player. Betting rounds continue until all cards are knocked out of the player's hand. In an analogy with ordinary bingo, the first player who realizes their hand is empty says bingo and hard pot. If no player is knocked out after all the centre cards have been revealed, then all players reveal their remaining cards. The winner can be determined by adding the rank value of the cards that remain in the hand. In determining the value, cranes are valued at 11, queens, at 12, kings at 13, and aces at 1 or 15, depending on whether the players agreed to win in a high rank or win in a low rank. The game can also be played with cards that have a blackjack value, with all facial cards having a value of 10 and the ace having a value of 1 or 11. Variations in Sixty-Six Bingo each player receives six cards and there are six common cards. Instead of betting in each round, there are betting rounds before any community cards are handed over, once the first two cards are reversed, after the third and fourth cards are turned around and the fifth and sixth cards are handed over. If no player claims that the pot has been knocked out, then the pot is divided between the high and the low hand. If the remaining cards of the player include an ace, then it is possible to be both high hand and low hand. Another variation gives each player five cards face down, and ten common cards should be placed in the middle of the table, face down. The merchant will turn over the first shared card and call it out. If a player has the same rank in his hand, then he will reject. The merchant will continue to call each card until all shared cards turn face up. A player who is able to throw away all five cards, calls bingo and wins the hand.
